CALL FOR POSTER PRESENTATIONS
PUBLIC HEALTH RESEARCH DAY CONFERENCE
APRIL 9, 2015, 2-5 PM

The UC San Diego Institute for Public Health will host the inaugural Public Health Research Day conference to highlight research accomplishments and real world public health activities of UC San Diego faculty and students. From 2:00 to 3:30 pm, the conference will feature a poster session to encourage interaction among members of the greater UC San Diego public health community. There are two separate “call for abstracts”, one for posters which feature relevant public health research and one for posters aimed at publicizing student internship experiences or community public health work that illustrate public health in action at UC San Diego. The second half of the conference will feature a panel presentation where four distinguished speakers of diverse backgrounds will talk about their unique journeys into public health on individual, community, and global levels.

Instructions:
A central goal of the poster sessions is to introduce attendees to the public health research and community work being done both locally and globally by UC San Diego faculty and students. The “Public Health Research” posters should highlight recently completed research or preliminary findings of ongoing work, while the “Public Health in Action” posters should describe real world public health efforts. Abstracts selected for presentation will be developed into the poster presentation prior to the opening of the poster session by the author. Authors are asked to remain with the poster for about 1 hour, responding to questions from interested observers.

Interested students, faculty, and post-docs should submit a structured abstract of no more than 250 words using the format below. Prizes will be awarded for the best poster in each category.
